WikiLeaks Shockwave Information Revolution

Jane Bryant, One Click Group Director

The release of the US Embassy Cables by WikiLeaks is an historian's dream and a diplomat's nightmare. These cables are likely to cause a diplomatic crisis. They have sent shockwaves around the world. This is just day one. Much more is to follow.

Through vested interests, power broking and occasional incompetence, the traditional media have frequently failed by design and omission to accurately cover much of the political issues that matter so much to so many today. The media are now reporting on a selection of these cables released by WikiLeaks. They are filtering from the raw data. They have been very, very selective. No UK citizen will ever forget the D Notice slapped on to the UK media in an attempt to prevent the British electorate learning full details of their political masters' calumny.

The US Embassy cables reveal the corrosive corruption of those in power. This is a terrible day for so-called democracy. These secret deals done in our respective names and without our knowledge will reinforce the contention of politics as the filthiest of scum level trades. The amount of money changing hands with no accountability and no evaluation is extraordinary.

Do your own homework and make up your own minds. Browse through the US Embassy cables with the Cable Viewer provided by WikiLeaks.

On One Click we would like to take the opportunity to thank Julian Assange and his team for placing this explosive data in the public domain. WikiLeaks needs all of our support. Duplicitous governments around the world will now be trebling their ranks-closing efforts to destroy WikiLeaks. It is in the public interest to ensure that these tactics do not succeed.

Freedom of speech and freedom of information have truly arrived in the internet era. We have WikiLeaks to thank for it.
